This was reported in the Sag Harbor, Long Island, New York Corrector on November 11, 1854: "We are told, that when the Empress of France [Eugenie] visits England, she will appear in a shawl worth forty thousand francs, with the arms of England and France woven in lace. This to be typical of the coming free trade in thread and cotton. Punch's own correspondent observes, in addition, that the Emperor's [Napoleon] dress waistcoat will be ornamented with a border of corkscrews and grape vines, as emblematic of his intentions of throwing open France to English steel, that England may, in return, take cheap French wine."
